HOW TO STOP SUCKING AND BE AWESOME INSTEAD

Jeff Atwood began the Coding Horror blog in 2004, and is convinced that it changed his life. He needed a way to keep track of software development over time – whatever he was thinking about or working on. He researched subjects he found interesting, then documented his research with a public blog post, which he could easily find and refer to later. Over time, increasing numbers of blog visitors found the posts helpful, relevant and interesting. Now, approximately 100,000 readers visit the blog...

Peek Inside the Book

Being an expert isn't telling other people what you know.It's understanding what questions to ask, and flexibly applying your knowledge to the specific situation at hand. Being an expert means providing sensible, highly contextual direction. Jeff Atwood, How to Stop Sucking and Be Awesome Instead //

Reader's Opinions

Another Blog-To-Book thingie - noticeable worse than the 1st one Jeff (famous @codinghorror) created few years ago. Some posts are remarkable, namely:* "Are you an expert?"* "On our project, we're always 90 percent done"* "How to become a better programmer by not programming"* "Who's your coding buddy?"* "Computer crime, then and...

Yes, it's a load of blog posts as a book. But I still enjoyed it. I didn't enjoy the many hyperlinks - not useful on a Kindle far from the Internet (although there were quoted text in the book as well).